How to change lives with 'raddi'

BHAVNA UCHIL
Mumbai

Can old newspapers, used clothes, metal cans and plastic containers change lives? Turns out, they can. Ask MESCO - Modern Educational and Cultural Organisation. This charitable organisation has provided educational aid to 4,162 underprivileged school and college students in 2018-19 by collecting these scrap and using the funds generated from their sale for educational aid.

In 1968, three junior college students of National College,

Vans collect scrap from over 3,200 homes across the city and suburbs
PIC: BL SONI

Bandra - Azhar Ali Qureishi, Abbas Khatkhatay and Saeed Ahmed Vohra came together to help other underprivileged students when they saw that many of their classmates could not afford to pay fees or buy books.

Initially, they sold ice cream and greeting cards to raise funds. It was a well-wisher who suggested the young men to collect old newspapers and sell them to raise funds, as this way the funds would come in regularly.

In the first year, they had managed to get just Rs 250 from collecting and selling old newspapers. Today, the NGO's newspaper collection unit has over 3,200 donors across the city, its suburbs, Thane and Navi Mumbai. Money generated from selling these is used to provide books to school and college students.

The NGO makes the best use of scrap they receive. Even used toys are collected and kept in nurseries that the organisation runs. Scrap such as wedding cards are used by teachers in these schools to make teaching-aid material and craft, games and puzzles.

The organisation's newspaper collection teams had collected over 1,80,000 kg of old newspapers last year. By collecting over 41,000 kg of used clothes and other recyclable scrap, the organisation generated over Rs 7.5 lakh. People can also donate academic and pleasure-reading books, which the NGO keeps in the library of a school it runs in Mahim.

By newspaper collection, the organization generates Rs 30 lakh annually, but of that, says its General Secretary Prof. Makba Farhaan, that it manages to get a net profit of only Rs 5 lakh on account of the operation cost of the collection vans and staff salaries.

A young scientist's leap from Kurla slum to Virginia

TIFR scientist Jaykumar Vaidya's research papers in reputed international journals earn him a PhD offer from the University of Virginia; his is an inspirational tale of grit and sweat

Rahul Galkwad

TWEETS @MumbaiMirror

A potholed lane lined with garbage leads to a small room in a Kurla slum. This is the house of 24-year-old scientist Jaykumar Vaidya, an ex-TIFR researcher whose grit and hard work have earned him a ticket out of his impoverished life. Vaidya will fly to the US today, where he will pursue his PhD at the University of Virginia.

While working at the Tata Institute of Fundamental Research (TIFR) as junior research associate, Vaidya published two scientific papers in reputed international journals in 2017 and 2018 based on which the University of Virginia invited him to join them as graduate research assistant.

Vaidya's journey—that began in one small room in Kurla—is full of such milestones. As a child he was raised by a single mother, Nalini, who was first banished from her marital home and later got divorced from her husband. She gave up her clerical job in 2003 to take care of her mother and worked several small jobs to make ends meet. Besides, she juggled court dates for the divorce case that lasted nine years.

Poverty threw a slew of challenges before Vaidya and his mother. "We survived on vada pav, samosa or chai and bread. There was no such thing as lunch or dinner. When we came back home by the end of the day, we ate," he told Mirror at his residence.

Atemple trust provided some provisions to the family and till today the mother-son duo wears second-hand clothes. A refrigerator and TV in the cramped room are also second-hand. Packed to capacity, this 75 sq ft room is where Vaidya studied for school and an engineering degree.

"There was never any money. I never went to school picnics, to eat outside with friends, to hang out or for movies. By the end of the month, we had less than Rs 10," he recalled. The desire to become a scientist germinated after watching Discovery channel at other people's homes. "There was always the hope that there is the next day; and that the next day would be better. I believed that everything is possible if you are patient, optimistic and hardworking," he said.

Vaidya's mother recalled, "I told him he would have a better life if he studied. I routinely got letters from school asking me to pay the fee or they would not show the results," she said, adding that the family went from pillar to post seeking help from various trusts. Some brutally advised Nalini to make her son a driver. However, steady funds from the MESCO Trust and the Indian Development Foundation (IDF) gave wings to Vaidya's dream of pursuing studies. To augment fund flow, Vaidya undertook soldering work at a TV repair shop when he was in school; this got him Rs 4,000 a month.

Vaidya graduated in electrical engineering from KJ Somaiya College of Engineering. While in college, he bagged three national-level and four state-level awards in robotics which earned him an internship at Larsen & Toubro. After graduation, he joined TIFR in 2016 for a monthly salary of Rs 30,000.

"I could finally renovate my house. It was infested with insects, the floor had no tiles and the bathroom was leaking," he said. He recently bought an air-conditioner as well.

Vaidya put in his hard-earned money to take GRE and TOEFL tests. While the University of Virginia has offered him an annual stipend of $ 23,400, the application and visa process have burnt a hole in his pocket. To keep afloat, Vaidya started teaching international students online. A white board framed on the wall above the bed is where he solved complicated equations standing and perched his phone on a wooden stand nailed to another wall.

Vaidya plans to work on solutions that will make India self-reliant in the hardware technologies. In the next two years, he plans to bring his mother to the US, as "she deserves the heaven," he said.

"Vaidya's work over the last three years propelled him for the PhD programme. He is an unusually hardworking person and I have not seen many like him," said Prof Manik M Deshmukh from TIFR, who was Vaidya's mentor.

MumbaiMirror - Mumbai, 15/08/2019

You don't need to be rich to experience joy of giving, prove NGOs

TIMES NEWS NETWORK

What happens when you say thank you to a farmer or fix a refrigerator for a stranger? Around 150 underprivileged kids from Delhi and a few repairmen from Mumbai are about to find out.

From October 2 to 8 this year, kids from the Delhi-based NGO Project WHY that is working towards educating underprivileged children and beneficiaries of Mumbai-based nonprofit MESCO (Modern Educational, Social and Cultural Organisation) will take part in the Daan Utsav festival which brings together Indians from all walks of life to celebrate and give.

Now in its 7th year of celebrations, Daan Utsav has moved closer to becoming a 'people's festival'. Volunteers are coming across individuals and groups who are inspiring others to celebrate the festival in their own way. These include the beneficiaries of these two NGOs who, through a series of benevolent gestures, will prove that you don't need to have deep pockets to be generous. A big heart will do.

"We want to use Daan Utsav as a platform to thank the families of over 100 children that we work with. Their parents work as daily-wage labourers near the Delhi-Noida highway. They subsist by growing and selling vegetables that ultimately feed us but never get any acknowledgement," says Rani Bhardwaj, coordinator of the 10-year-old Project WHY, whose 150 students will distribute 'Thank You' cards to the nondescript farmers. In the recent past too, the kids have undertaken similar activities, extending their gratitude to everyone from cobblers to shopkeepers by distributing chocolates and Parle G biscuits. "Many of them found it hard to believe that someone could actually thank them," says Bhardwaj.

Mumbaijars too can benefit from such gestures during the Daan Utsav week if they register for the various services and activities planned by MESCO, a non-profit in Mumbai working in the fields of education, medicine and poverty relief. This year, MESCO and its sister concern MESCO Education Society (MES) will conduct a host of free activities including an aptitude test and counseling session for roughly 120 students of tenth grade from municipal and other schools in Mumbai. "We all are born with an instinct to help others, only a reason, motivation and a platform is needed to showcase our sensitivity," says M A Khatkhatay, founder member of MES, whose members will conduct teaching aid, puppet making, and painting workshop for teachers from 10 schools.

Interestingly alumni of MES's Vocational Training Centre—who have completed their electrical, AC and Refrigeration courses—will also provide their services free of cost to more than 75 families who will register. Twenty-two-year-old Mumbai resident Shaikh Mohammed Irfan, who had supervised MESCO's repair and servicing activity last year, recall over 20 satisfied customers of their free service. "We not only gained knowledge but also blessings," he says.

On October 2, there will also be a career mela where over 300 students from eighth grade onwards will be given free career counselling by former students of MESCO, who are now into different professions. Besides, 12 doctors—including former students of MESCO and parents of MES's Crescent English High School—will conduct a medical checkup camp for 300 students from municipal schools. Other highlights include workshops on 'healthy tiffin', 'child and sexual abuse' and 'parenting'.

Also, girls who have completed beautician courses will offer free hair-cutting and eye brow threading services for women. For three days last year, kids, housewives and others had queued up for the free mehndi and haircutting services, recalls beautician Sayyed Mehrin Naaz, an alumnus of MESCO. "There was no time to sit. But good work yields a good name, right?" says Naaz.

EDUCATIONAL SUPPORT PROGRAMMES

“The main hope of a nation lies in the proper education of its youth” — Desiderius Erasmus Roterodamus

MESCO has developed several Educational Schemes to bring about a change to improve the society and curtail the dropout rate of students and encourage them to pursue their dreamed professions.

HIGH COST EDUCATION SCHOLARSHIP (HCES)

In the Educational sphere, the demand for the professional courses increases with ever increasing cut throat competition in the market. “There is always light at the end of the tunnel”

Jovita D'souza came from a family of four, mother, father and a younger sister. From the school days, Jovita was keen on studying and always scored good but had difficulty in paying fees. When she scored 74% in HSC and wanted to pursue Pharmacy which costs more than 5 Lakhs for 4 years, her family was in dilemma, how they will manage the fees as the only earning person was her father who was a private driver with less income and with that income they were already managing food expenses, all bills, her sister's college fees and mother's medication expenses who is a diabetic patient, all with one man's income.

In the first year she somehow managed to pay the fees by taking loan from her cousins but was always in constant pressure, how she will manage rest three year's fees. Her father suffered Paralytic attack due to stress of paying the fees. In hope of still finding a way, she searched on internet and found MESCO and then MESCO enrolled her in its High Cost Education Scholarship (HCES) in 2016.

As she says...“I was welcomed with respect by all staff members of MESCO right from the security guard to the Head of the Organization. MESCO has helped me to study without worrying about my fee. I'm grateful that MESCO gave me an opportunity to pursue my career of choice and made me an independent individual to also support my family”.

Today she is working as Medical Business Associate in GlaxoSmithKline Pharma Company.
